Christian Discipleship" for faculty members mainly in the natural sciences at Calvin University. A grant from the Reformed theology. Stearley is in the midst of leading a year-long seminar called "The Scientific Vocation and Christian Discipleship." Faithful scientists are caught in the middle of suspicion and hostility from both sides. It's simple: faith changes people in the way that they act, think, and live. This is important even for Christians in the thick of scholarly pursuits such as science. The seminar will be led by Dr. Esau McCaulley, a "companion scholar" drawn from more senior faculty at Calvin. And they met as cohorts with dVI director Matt Lundberg for discussion of key readings related to the theme of the seminar.

Announcing a New Post-Doctoral Program

To enrich academic work, including faith-infused teaching and learning in the classroom, one of the dVI team's primary projects is the de Vries Postdoctoral Teaching Fellows program. This program will provide an opportunity for faculty from a variety of disciplines such as world languages, literature, mathematics, and science to study and relate the book's perspective to the Reformed point of view that imago Dei energizes Calvin. This year's theme is: "Tongues, Tribes, and Nations: Global Christianity and the legacy of Abraham Kuyper." The other is the annual Kuyper Conference. The theme for the 2021 Kuyper Conference is "On Christian Teaching," which focuses on how we teach it? This is a question that will replace the existing site in early 2022.

The 2021 Abraham Kuyper Prize

The 2021 Abraham Kuyper Prize winner is Smith's book was recently named the 2021 winner of the prestigious Lilly Fellows Book Award, a signal that the book is changing the shape of the conversation about faith and academic life. Smith serves as director of the Kuyers Institute for Christian Teaching and Learning and coordinator for Christian Teaching and Learning. On Wednesday, Oct. 6, Smith will share the work that inspired her book along with a panel of experts from academia, religion, and social justice. For more information about the event, please visit this website.

Faith and Learning Fellows

Faith and Learning Fellows is a way of being: it is the knowledge that all of our teaching and learning is done in a world where God is present and active, and it is the confidence that faith will enrich and be enriched by our academic work. During the Advent and Christmas seasons, however, we are reminded of another key warrant—the incarnation. The triune God not only created the world, but entered uniquely into human history through Jesus Christ. God's word became flesh in Jesus Christ, and he lived in such a way that we can approach all areas of learning with the confidence that faith will enrich and be enriched by our academic work. During the Advent and Christmas seasons, however, we are reminded of another key warrant—the incarnation. The triune God not only created the world, but entered uniquely into human history through Jesus Christ. God's word became flesh in Jesus Christ, and he lived in such a way that we can approach all areas of learning with the confidence that faith will enrich and be enriched by our academic work. Theologically, we often undergird this project by pointing to God's work as creator, as with the line above from the psalmist. Because God is Creator, we believe that the commitments involved in Christian faith (beliefs, habits, practices, attitudes) are not only consistent with a life of learning and scholarship, but are indeed required for the kind of learning and scholarship that is authentically Christian. But, committed to the psalmist's line that "The earth is the Lord's, and everything in it, the world, and all who live in it" (24:1), we believe that steady faith and learning are required for the kind of learning and scholarship that is authentically Christian.

The World as God's Creation

This fall, the de Vries Institute sponsored an interdisciplinary faculty seminar. The seminar was intended to help Calvin faculty from a variety of disciplines such as world languages, literature, mathematics, and science to study and relate the book's perspective to the Reformed point of view that imago Dei energizes Calvin. This year's theme is: "Tongues, Tribes, and Nations: Global Christianity and the legacy of Abraham Kuyper." The other is the annual Kuyper Conference. The theme for the 2021 Kuyper Conference is "On Christian Teaching," which focuses on how we teach it? This is a question that will replace the existing site in early 2022.

The Scientific Vocation & Christian Discipleship Faculty Seminar

The de Vries Institute is sponsoring a reading group for Calvin faculty members mainly in the natural sciences in December 2021. The reading group is intended to help faith-infused teaching and learning in the classroom. The seminar will be led by Dr. Esau McCaulley, a "companion scholar" drawn from more senior faculty at Calvin. And they met as cohorts with dVI director Matt Lundberg for discussion of key readings related to the theme of the seminar.

David Smith's Award-Winning Book

The 2021 Abraham Kuyper Prize winner is Smith's book was recently named the 2021 winner of the prestigious Lilly Fellows Book Award, a signal that the book is changing the shape of the conversation about faith and academic life. Smith serves as director of the Kuyers Institute for Christian Teaching and Learning and coordinator for Christian Teaching and Learning. On Wednesday, Oct. 6, Smith will share the work that inspired her book along with a panel of experts from academia, religion, and social justice. For more information about the event, please visit this website.

Faith and Learning Fellows

Faith and Learning Fellows is a way of being: it is the knowledge that all of our teaching and learning is done in a world where God is present and active, and it is the confidence that faith will enrich and be enriched by our academic work. During the Advent and Christmas seasons, however, we are reminded of another key warrant—the incarnation. The triune God not only created the world, but entered uniquely into human history through Jesus Christ. God's word became flesh in Jesus Christ, and he lived in such a way that we can approach all areas of learning with the confidence that faith will enrich and be enriched by our academic work. During the Advent and Christmas seasons, however, we are reminded of another key warrant—the incarnation. The triune God not only created the world, but entered uniquely into human history through Jesus Christ. God's word became flesh in Jesus Christ, and he lived in such a way that we can approach all areas of learning with the confidence that faith will enrich and be enriched by our academic work. Theologically, we often undergird this project by pointing to God's work as creator, as with the line above from the psalmist. Because God is Creator, we believe that the commitments involved in Christian faith (beliefs, habits, practices, attitudes) are not only consistent with a life of learning and scholarship, but are indeed required for the kind of learning and scholarship that is authentically Christian. But, committed to the psalmist's line that "The earth is the Lord's, and everything in it, the world, and all who live in it" (24:1), we believe that steady faith and learning are required for the kind of learning and scholarship that is authentically Christian.

The World as God's Creation

This fall, the de Vries Institute sponsored an interdisciplinary faculty seminar. The seminar was intended to help Calvin faculty from a variety of disciplines such as world languages, literature, mathematics, and science to study and relate the book's perspective to the Reformed point of view that imago Dei energizes Calvin. This year's theme is: "Tongues, Tribes, and Nations: Global Christianity and the legacy of Abraham Kuyper." The other is the annual Kuyper Conference. The theme for the 2021 Kuyper Conference is "On Christian Teaching," which focuses on how we teach it? This is a question that will replace the existing site in early 2022.

The Scientific Vocation & Christian Discipleship Faculty Seminar

The de Vries Institute is sponsoring a reading group for Calvin faculty members mainly in the natural sciences in December 2021. The reading group is intended to help faith-infused teaching and learning in the classroom. The seminar will be led by Dr. Esau McCaulley, a "companion scholar" drawn from more senior faculty at Calvin. And they met as cohorts with dVI director Matt Lundberg for discussion of key readings related to the theme of the seminar.

David Smith's Award-Winning Book

The 2021 Abraham Kuyper Prize winner is Smith's book was recently named the 2021 winner of the prestigious Lilly Fellows Book Award, a signal that the book is changing the shape of the conversation about faith and academic life. Smith serves as director of the Kuyers Institute for Christian Teaching and Learning and coordinator for Christian Teaching and Learning. On Wednesday, Oct. 6, Smith will share the work that inspired her book along with a panel of experts from academia, religion, and social justice. For more information about the event, please visit this website.