Project Description:

Our team has proposed the idea for a sediment capturing device that could easily analyze the amount of sediment in a stream. This sediment will be the suspended particles floating in the water, above the bed of the river. Additionally, this device would measure the temperature, specific conductance, and the flow of the stream for the subject to analyze. This device is intended for educational and professional use to collect data in Plaster Creek.