Sextortion: is the practice of extorting money or sexual favors from someone by threatening to reveal evidence of their sexual activity. For example, a person who interacts with you on social media, entices you into a vulnerable sexual situation while recording it. Then they threaten to publish pictures or video unless you agree to pay a specified amount of money. Calvin University Safer Spaces policy prohibits sextortion, a form a sexual exploitation.

Here is a list of red flags to identify possible sextortion:

- Person does not have a working camera: The person you are talking to does not have a working camera, but they still want you to share yours.
- Fast-paced contact: The person contacts you immediately after they follow you and quickly tries to get you to send images or join a video call.
- Use of fear: The person you are talking to uses fear tactics to attempt to get you to pay them money.
- Low number of pictures: The person’s profile has only a few photos available.
- Numerous misspellings: The profile has common words misspelled.
- New profile: The profile is new and does not have a lot of followers/friends.

If you do find yourself speaking with a possible sextortionist, consider the following strategies:

- Cease contact: Every situation is different. Sextortionists who are motivated by financial gain usually do not distribute images. The best first line of defense is to end all contact.
- Collect evidence and document communications: This will help in your effort to file a police report.
- Block: Immediately block the person on your social media pages, email, and phone.
- Do not pay: If the person requests money, do not pay them. This will likely increase the threats and extortion efforts of the person attempting to receive money.
- Report to law enforcement: You can contact your local law enforcement agency, the Federal Bureau of Investigation, or the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children if you are a minor.
- Beware of expensive cyber-recovery scams: These scams claim to be able to access the images and destroy them. Often, this is another layer to the overall sextortion scam.
- Consider deactivating your social media accounts: If you are being contacted across multiple profiles, it may be beneficial to temporarily deactivate your accounts.
