

FYRES Coordinator 2022-2023

Jacob Fetter

Jacob Fetter is a sophomore studying Environmental Studies with a concentration in Geography. He is from the far west suburbs of Chicago, in a city named Saint Charles. Last year, as a student in FYRES, he studied the populations of Cirsium Pitcheri, or Pitcher's Thistle, on a dune blowout at Rosy Mound Natural Area near Grand Haven, MI. He enjoyed the experience greatly and decided to get involved in the program and facilitate more students to have field experiences. Jacob is keeping his career options after college open but considering a job with the National Park Service. When not working or studying environmental conservation, he enjoys playing video games and repairing or making things when he can find a workshop.
